Collars:

Kent collar

This collar form is suitable for just about any occasion. It can be worn with or without a tie, and looks good with all kinds of knot. It is also ideal in combination with a bow-tie.

Cutaway collar

The form of a cutaway collar resembles that of a shark's mouth. The collar points are further apart than with the Kent collar, which makes this type ideal for a tie with a wide knot or a jacket with a lower cut.

Button-down collar

This is the most casual form of collar and is ideal for people who prefer wearing a shirt without a tie. The collar points are fixed in place by small buttons to ensure that they stay in place. There is also an under-button-down variant, in which the buttons are concealed beneath the collar.

Stand-up collar

This type of collar, also known as a mandarin collar, has no wings. Neither a tie nor a bow-tie can be worn with a stand-up collar.

Collar stiffeners

These are small stays that are incorporated in the points of the collar to ensure that it keeps its shape. Some collar stays are permanently sewn into the collar. These support the application of embroidery, should such a finish be desired. However, it is important to check the compatibility of the envisaged motif or logo.

Non-iron shirts retain their shape after washing. However, the non-iron feature diminishes after a few washes.

Materials:

Popeline

This is a light and versatile fabric with a high density that makes it very resilient.

Oxford fabric

Oxford is soft but strong, with a strongly textured appearance. The plain weave cotton fabric makes the shirt highly durable despite being soft. Its characteristic coloration stems from the mixture of coloured and white yarns in the warp and weft.

Chambray

A fine and light fabric with a robust plain weave. The special weaving technique creates a subtle bicolour effect with an elegant appearance, and it is pleasantly soft to the touch.

Twill

A twill weave results in a soft, flowing fabric with a diagonal rib pattern. White shirts made of twill material are generally more opaque than popelin shirts. They are often preferred when no jacket is worn over the shirt.

Easy-iron renders the fabric surface smoother and prevents the iron making light creases in the material.

Denim

A robust cotton fabric that is not only used to make jeans but is also suitable for shirts and jackets. The warp yarn is dyed an indigo colour, while+B23 the weft thread remains white. It is this that gives the fabric its characteristic blue coloration.

Fil-a-Fil

A plain weave that is popular with shirts and is highly durable. It is woven with coloured threads to create a lightly speckled effect that can be employed to create interesting accentuations.

Flannel

A loose, light fabric that is pleasantly soft and warm to the touch. It is, however, at the same time very robust. Flannel is commonly used to make sports shirts, very often in combination with a checked (lumberjack style) design.

Returns of shirts or blouses that are individually factory packed will not be accepted once they have been unpacked.
